01 Purpose and scope

The procedure is a synthetic fixture for the PeopleOps AI demonstration.

It is not legal advice and must not be used for an employment decision.

Process owner: Payroll Operations

Control owner: People Operations

System of record: the payroll system and its approval log

Every change must have a source request, an authorized approval and an effective payroll period before it is included in a payroll run.

02 Change intake and approval

A change request must identify the employee, change type and effective date.

Payroll Operations validates the request against the employee record.

The manager confirms the business reason for recurring compensation changes.

People Operations confirms changes that affect employment conditions.

Bank account changes require an additional identity verification step.

One-time payments require the approving cost center and payment reason.

Requests received after the payroll cut-off move to the next eligible cycle.

No payroll change is applied based only on an informal message or chat.

03 Validation and exception handling

Payroll Operations checks required fields before submitting a change.

The reviewer compares the effective date with the payroll calendar.

Conflicting requests remain pending until the source of truth is confirmed.

A rejected request includes a reason and may be resubmitted with corrections.

Required evidence for a completed change:

- source request and request identifier;
- approval identity and timestamp;
- validated effective date and payroll period;
- result of the payroll processing check.

This procedure does not define career progression or promotion criteria.

04 Audit and related controls

Payroll Operations retains the approval trail for the configured retention period.

People Operations reviews exceptions and recurring failure patterns monthly.

Access to payroll changes is restricted to authorized roles.

A material discrepancy is escalated and corrected through a controlled rerun.

Related controls include vacation approvals, expense processing and HRIS access.

Those controls are separate procedures and cannot be inferred here.

If two approved sources conflict, Payroll Operations escalates the issue.
