01 Purpose and scope

This fictional policy defines how employees request vacation and leave.

It applies to all regular employees unless a written local addendum says otherwise.

The policy is a synthetic fixture for the PeopleOps AI demonstration.

It is not legal advice and must not be used for an employment decision.

Policy owner: People Operations

Review cadence: annual and after a material regulatory change

Primary record: the approved request in the HRIS

Employees remain responsible for checking their available balance before submitting a request. A request is not approved merely because it was submitted.

02 Request and approval process

An employee may request vacation up to the available balance.

The request should include the start date, end date and a contact plan.

The direct manager reviews staffing impact and records an approval or rejection.

People Operations reviews requests that exceed the available balance.

People Operations review is also required when the request:

- overlaps a leave period;
- approaches a contract end date; or
- requires an exception to a local scheduling rule.

Approval is not an automatic employment action. An authorized reviewer records the final decision and the decision date in the HRIS.

03 Exceptions and evidence

A manager may request an exception when business continuity requires it.

The exception request must state the reason, affected dates and mitigation plan.

People Operations confirms whether the exception is permitted.

No exception is valid until the approval is recorded in the HRIS.

Required evidence for an approved request:

- request identifier and employee identifier;
- requested dates and balance at the time of review;
- manager decision and timestamp;
- People Operations decision when an exception applies.

A question about promotion, compensation or career progression is outside the scope of this policy and must not be inferred from a leave approval.

04 Responsibilities and related controls

Employees submit accurate requests and keep contact information current.

Managers review requests consistently and avoid decisions based on protected data.

People Operations maintains the policy, handles exceptions and audits records.

The HRIS is the system of record for balances and approval decisions.

Related controls include payroll cut-off dates, leave records and access review.

Those controls do not change the approval requirement in this document.

If two approved sources conflict, the issue must be escalated to People Operations.
